Partnering with the China Studies Centre

THE UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY

The significance of studying China today

At the China Studies Centre, our goal is to learn how China is dealing with issues of global relevance. We believe that local knowledge and expertise on China is profoundly relevant to serious engagement with the increasingly connected issues of our time.

Who we are

Established in early 2011, the China Studies Centre is a strategic initiative aimed at strengthening understanding and collaboration in researching global issues in China. We foster engagement with China by supporting multidisciplinary research, in-country study, academic events, public forums, publications and industry partnerships.

Why partner with us

Why partner with us

We develop relationships with a range of stakeholders, such as industry research partners, international businesses and academics, and translate that collaboration into improved knowledge and expertise on China. As a partner of the China Studies Centre, you join a community of industry leaders in building China-Australia relations. Partnering with us maximises your opportunity to benefit from collaborative research and commercialisation and increases your organisation's social impact.

China Studies Centre

Our research excellence

The centre is defined by the excellence of its research community.

We work with a network of more than 330 researchers across 19 disciplines, including architecture, design and planning; arts and social sciences; business; music; engineering and computer science; health sciences; law; medicine and health; and history.

They are engaged in innovative multifaceted research on China broadly, including Hong Kong, Macau, Taiwan and overseas Chinese communities.

Supporting the University's strategy for research engagement on China, we have defined seven research clusters to address the issues that affect our understanding of China.

China in the Urban Age

Nowhere in the modern world has the phenomenon of territorial and social transformation been more rapid, comprehensive and all-encompassing than in China.

In 2018, we launched the research theme 'China in the Urban Age' to take a multidisciplinary approach to urban issues in China. The research theme challenges well-established ways of seeing the city to facilitate broader conversations on the issues of urbanisation. This theme engages not only our academic members but also colleagues and collaborators from across Australia and internationally, across all disciplines.

Partnership opportunities

We connect researchers to the community and engage with government and industry through public forums, exclusive industry events and projects which tackle complex social, technical and business challenges. Through these events you can expand your network, consolidate relationships, and strengthen your profile as a thought leader in business and policymaking.

What our partners say

A Chinese approach to AI and big data

Fostering China knowledge

The China Studies Centre is a hub for our diverse community of students who are exploring important issues related to China. We help students develop cultural competence through in-country experience, student-facing events featuring industry speakers, and access to resources and opportunities to develop their research and 'China literacy'.

Publications

We support and celebrate the research our members and partners are doing that will make a difference for China, Australia and the world.

We collaborate with our academic and industry partners to publish joint reports on research achievements in a wide range of industry sectors.

You can find more information about our centre publications, staff, students and partners on our website.
