Report

'Sir George', said Professor Ward in his presentation remarks, 'has been in the forefront of medical practice in otolaryngology and has been conspicuously generous in his public, as distinct from his professional, work for the deaf'.

'Few people have done so much to provide practical assistance for those with loss of hearing.'

The Vice-Chancellor went on to refer to the 'wise counsel' Sir George had given the University when it set up a Chair in Otolaryngology, and to the part he had played in raising funds for the purpose.
