Honours is a prestigious year of undergraduate study, which will provide you with the opportunity to challenge and extend on the knowledge developed in your bachelor's degree. Honours provides you with the opportunity to develop research skills, to undertake independent research and to complete a project leading to a thesis.

Overview

The Bachelor of Advanced Studies (Honours) (Politics and International Relations) is an additional, appended degree and year of intensive study that high achieving students may apply for and study after completion of a relevant bachelor's degree.

The Bachelor of Advanced Studies (Honours) (Politics and International Relations) extends your prior studies, deepening your expertise in the field and opening the door to further research, such as a master's by research or a PhD. If further research isn't the aim, the Bachelor of Advanced Studies (Honours) (Politics and International Relations) will develop transferrable skills to complement your bachelor's degree, such as critical thinking and communication skills, and project management and delivery. Honours is the next step if you're seeking a competitive edge in your career.

Under the guidance and mentorship of an academic supervisor, you'll select a thesis topic and identify your method of research. This prepares you to write your thesis so that it makes an argument based on rigorous study and empirical assessment. Academic supervisors are looking for high-performing students who can work independently.

What you'll study

If you choose to pursue the Bachelor of Advanced Studies (Honours) (Politics and International Relations), you will undertake:

- Honours units of study (4000-level or above)
- A supervised but independent honours research project

Indicative entry requirements
